We are here today for a noble purpose. We are here to dedicate this park to the whole people — no matter from what remote land... no matter to what sect or religion they belong... no matter in what field of labor... however elevated or however humbled. We are here to proclaim equality of rights to all, and to dedicate this park, now and forever, to the people of this great city.

When Mayor Thomas Swann dedicated Druid Hill Park in 1860, he proclaimed:

"We are here today for a noble purpose. We are here to dedicate this park to the whole people — no matter from what remote land... no matter to what sect or religion they belong... no matter in what field of labor... however elevated or however humbled. We are here to proclaim equality of rights to all, and to dedicate this park, now and forever, to the people of this great city."

When Mayor Thomas Swann dedicated Druid Hill Park in 1860, he proclaimed:

"We are here today for a noble purpose. We are here to dedicate this park to the whole people — no matter from what remote land... no matter to what sect or religion they belong... no matter in what field of labor... however elevated or however humbled. We are here to proclaim equality of rights to all, and to dedicate this park, now and forever, to the people of this great city."